Q1. Read the passage and answer the following questions:

There are two types of camel in the world, dromedary camel and bactrian camel. The dromedary camels have a single hump, and was domesticated in Arabia over 4,000 years ago. They are also found in North Africa, India, Pakistan and Australia. The size of the hump varies, becoming smaller and leaning to one side during times of starvation. The lips of dromedary camels are thick to allow them to eat coarse and thorny desert plants. Their long legs keep their bodies high off the ground to avoid the baking heat of the desert's surface.

Bactrian camels have two humps, and are found in the desert of Central Asia. They extremely adept at withstanding wide variations in temperature – from freezing cold to blistering heat.
